Tuition & Cost to Attend UGA

In today’s economic environment, families are more concerned than ever with the cost of higher education. The University of Georgia continues to be considered one of the “best buys” of colleges, especially when rankings consider both the low cost of attending and the high quality of education received. Graduates of UGA have one of the lowest debts following completion of their degree and, with the HOPE Scholarship for Georgia residents, almost all in-state students begin their studies at UGA paying limited tuition or fees.
Last year, UGA awarded more than $7 million in scholarships and awards from University Foundation funds to undergraduate students. Approximately 14% of the new first-year students enrolling received an academic scholarship.

GA Residency

To qualify for in-state tuition, students must show documented proof of Georgia residency.

Remember, your residency status has no bearing on your admission decision to UGA.

Following admission to UGA, students who are classified as non-residents prior to enrollment may apply for in-state residency. In reviewing petitions, UGA considers each student’s situation as unique and we do understand that there are situations that may alter the review process.

Taking AP/IB courses in high school?

Great! Taking Advanced Placement or International Baccalaureate courses in high school can also help you financially as you may have the opportunity to earn college credit or place out of select courses based on your final scores.
